[NUMB. 784.]

THE South-Carolina Gazette.

From MONDAY May 8th, to MONDAY May 15th, 1749.

The Remainder of 'An Examination of the PRINCIPLES, and an 'Enquiry into the Conduct of the Two B——rs, in regard to 'the Eſtabliſhment of their Power, and the Proſecution of the 'War, 'till the ſigning the Preliminaries,' begun in our laſt.

HAVING thus brought the new men into full poſſeſſion, our Examiner next follows them through the ſeveral meaſures they took to eſtabliſh their power: Such as, reſtoring that putrid body, of which the E— of O——d had been the head; gratifying the intereſted part of the Tories, in two or three of their members; and taking ſuch a part of the citizens of London into their connection, by contracts, remittances, &c. and by giving up the negative of the court of aldermen ſo long contended for, as ſhould enable them to trample on the reſt. But (who could have thought, if this author had not told us) that the D— himſelf, in being advanced to the command of the A—y, was only made an inſtrument to ſerve the ambitious purpoſe of theſe B——rs? That they choſe him to recommend themſelves to the F——r, and balance the natural weight of another P—e, whom they neglected.—The paragraph is very remarkable. 'There was but one perſon in B—n, from whom they had 'any thing to apprehend; A perſon, whoſe natural intereſt, ſooner 'or later, was likely to be too mighty for them; whoſe natural in'clinations were too noble and too good to be debauched by any 'temptations; who having no purpoſes to ſerve, but ſuch as were 'both innocent and meritorious, was out of the reach of terror; and 'who had too reverential a regard for his R—F—; too tender an 'affection for his poſterity, too high a value for his own glory, too 'warm a zeal for the ſplendor of the Britiſh monarchy, and too 'paſſionate a concern for the welfare of the Britiſh nation, to make 'the ſmalleſt ſacrifice to ſo infamous a cabal. A ſtrict union in the 'R—m—F——y muſt have placed that perſon where he ought to 'be placed, at the right hand of the T——e; a ſituation too cloſe 'to his ——'s ear, for any wicked m———r to ſuffer an h—r 'ap———t to occupy; eſpecially an h—r a——t with ſo much 'application to learn what was right, ſuch ſuperior opportunities 'of knowing what was wrong, and ſo honeſt a heart to rectify the 'one, and to proſecute the other.

'That, therefore this ſtrict union might be rendered as hopeleſs as 'their management could render it, they not only followed the 'ſteps of their great original, the E— of O——, in making 'or widening a breach, as they followed him in every thing elſe 'that was weak or ill, but they improved upon his practice, by 'bringing forward the y—r B——r on the ſtage of action, with 'all the advantages they could heap upon him; that by ſome daz'zling exploit, he might eclipſe the e———r; that they might 'create a jealouſy between both; or nouriſh an improper arrogance 'in the one, which they imagined would not fail to beget an im'proper reſentment in the other: And that from every one of theſe 'conſequences, they might draw ſome conſiderable advantage to 'themſelves, by playing upon the paſſions or prejudices of their 'R——l M———r.

'It is no breach of charity to ſay, ſuch was their purpoſe; and 'it is out of all queſtion, that this purpoſe of theirs hath been effec'tually defeated. For ſuch was the good ſenſe, and ſuch was the 'temper of the P———, that he betrayed no reſentment, he re'ceived his B———, as often as he had opportunity to receive him, 'with all the diſtinction due to his birth and ſervices———But 'if, in this one particular, this notable meaſure has failed, in e'very other it has anſwered their moſt ſanguine expectations.'

What follows, being much the greateſt part of the pamphlet, relates almoſt wholly to the conduct of the war ſince the beginning of the year 1745, when his R——H—— was put at the head of the Britiſh army in Flanders. It contains ſo many particulars of a tender nature, (ſays the Weſtminſter Journal) that one muſt naturally wiſh they had not been true, or that there had been no occaſion to mention them: But our higheſt regard, our greateſt tenderneſs ſhould be to the publick: And it would be highly criminal, admitting what this author advances to be true, to conceal the iniquity of the two B——rs, becauſe a name more reſpectable happens to occur in their ſtory. All the cenſure muſt fall on them, ſince it is impoſſible to ſuppoſe any guilt in the perſon they artfully made their inſtrument.

When our Examiner tells us, therefore, of muſters, which in the field ſeldom exceeded half the number given in upon paper, and that the anſwer would be 'the D—— has certified them compleat'; —that one motive for ſetting the D—— at the head of the army was, that of preventing, or defeating p——y enquiries;—of their aiming to ruin the war through the natural warmth and inexperience of his R——H——; of endeavouring to ſow the ſeeds of animoſity between his R——H—— and his b———r the P—— of O——; —with many other particulars equally heinous and incredible;—we muſt entirely except the D— from any crime implicated in thoſe charges, we muſt conclude his R—H——— to be as much impoſed on as other perſons;—and that he had, in fact, 'as much reaſon 'to complain of the perfidy of the two B——rs, as either the * 'his F—r, the P——— his B——r, or the whole nation in gene'ral.'

Many other artifices, according to this author, his two heroes uſed, to gain their favourite point of ruining the war; ſuch as, their delaying to take the Ruſſians more early into our ſervice, their contriving to render them uſeleſs when they were actually engaged;—their hindering the allies from compleating their quotas of troops, by delaying payments, and then charging them with the deficiency as a failure in their engagements;——their refuſing to treat if any other m———r but themſelves might have ſhared in the honour of a treaty;—their feigning a diſunion of councils betwixt themſelves, that one might lead the party inclined to war, and the other that deſirous of peace, till they could accompliſh their united purpoſes.

Copy of a Letter in the LONDON EVENING POST.

From H——TE to Sir W. C——r, Lord Mayor.

My Lord Mayor,

THE general corruption of the age I have the misfortune to live in, and the frequent deteſtable inſtances of apoſtacy from every principle of honour, integrity, and publick ſpirit of many of my countrymen, both of my own and a ſuperior rank; having fully convinced me, that the endeavours of the few, determined to live and die honeſt men, are fruitleſs and vain, I have reſolved to ſeek that ſmall ſhare of happineſs, which is to be acquir'd in this venal country, in privacy and retirement, where I am ſure it is only to be found; and therefore I am determin'd to return no more to London, unleſs my private concerns call me thither. I cannot think it in any reſpect right to hold an office I ſhall never attend: This obliges me to apply to your lordſhip and court of aldermen for leave to reſign my gown, and beg the court will accept of this my reſignation, and that your lordſhip will be pleaſed to iſſue a precept for the election of ſome other perſon to ſerve inſtead of me for the ward of Wallbrook. I moſt ſincerely wiſh health and felicity to my brethren the aldermen, and the moſt flouriſhing commerce, with the full enjoyments of liberty, to the citizens of London, to whom I am inexpreſſibly oblig'd for the many honours and truſts they have repoſed in me; all which I can, with a ſafe conſcience, ſay, I have faithfully faithfully discharg'd, without ever having once betray'd or deceiv'd.
